

LEFT HOOK

Client	HMP – VA-2	Talent
Title	Already	ISCI
Draft	2.0	Music
Date	9.13.24	Prod./Ed.

VIDEO	AUDIO	BACKUP
We see footage of Kiggans.	Narrator: You've got to hand it to Jen Kiggans.
We cut to see more footage of Kiggans, the GFX animate on documentary style, as if it's from a news report. GFX: Jen Kiggans Pay-to-Play Scandal	Narrator: It's her first term, and she's already been caught in a pay-to play scandal.	In her first term, Jen Kiggans “requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab. — Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’

		— The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24) “The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500” to Jen Kiggans in “early February and $1,000 in March 2023,” then on “April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor,’” and “less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab. — Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income
--	--	--

		and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’ — The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24) “Pay-to-play” is a “quid pro quo” scheme where payment is made “in exchange for something else, and pay-to-play legislation are “anti-corruption” laws. ““Pay-to-play’ laws regulate political contributions made by persons seeking or holding government contracts. In many cases, these anti-corruption provisions also ban, limit, or require the reporting of contributions made by individuals and entities who are affiliated with government contractors, such as subcontractors, officers, directors, salespersons, and family members. The number of jurisdictions and public entities that have adopted “pay-to-play” laws or policies is ever-growing, and their procurement and campaign finance requirements vary widely. Wiley advises clients regarding compliance with these complex pay-to-play laws at the federal, state, local, and agency levels. Failure to comply with these laws can result in penalties that are potentially severe, such as the loss of valuable contracts with public entities and preclusion from government contracts for several years.” (Wiley, accessed 09/17/24) “Pay to Play politics refers to a type of system in which the dominant idea is quid pro quo, or paying something in exchange for something else. Specifically, Pay to Play politics involve a system under which a payer must engage in political fundraising by making a campaign contribution to a specific group in order to obtain certain clear benefits, such as no-bid Government contracts. Policies of the Pay to Play variety have come under a great deal of criticism, not least because they are dangerously close to the
--	--	--

		practice of bribery.” (Laws.com, 12/22/19)
We transition to see footage of Kiggans shaking hands, smiling with people in suits. GFX: Jen Kiggans Tried To Give Tax Dollars To Her Donors Politico, 7.11.24, 7.23.24	Narrator: News reports reveal Kiggans tried to give our tax dollars to her corporate donors.	In her first term, Jen Kiggans “requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab. — Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’ — The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24) “The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500” to

		Jen Kiggans in “early February and $1,000 in March 2023,” then on “April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor,’” and “less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab. — Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’ — The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24)
--	--	--

We transition to see footage of skyscrapers, the GFX animate on as if pulled directly from Politico. GFX: Jen Kiggans Received “Thousands Of Dollars” From Donors Politico, 7.23.24	Narrator: Kiggans took “thousands of dollars” in campaign contributions from two corporations.	Jen Kiggans withdrew “her request for a $7.4 million earmark for a natural gas pipeline” after it was publicly reported that “Kiggans received thousands of dollars in campaign contributions from the corporate political action committees of Rocket Lab and Tyson Foods, two of the companies that could benefit from the pipeline.” “Virginia Republican Rep. Jen Kiggans is withdrawing her request for a $7.4 million earmark for a natural gas pipeline in her district after questions emerged about the funding [...] Kiggans first changed the recipient information on her website after POLITICO’s E&E News asked about it, but later pulled the earmark request altogether. Kiggans received thousands of dollars in campaign contributions from the corporate political action committees of Rocket Lab and Tyson Foods, two of the companies that could benefit from the pipeline, POLITICO reported.” (Politico, 07/23/24) In her first term, Jen Kiggans “requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and
---	---	---

		Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab. — Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’ — The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24) “The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500” to Jen Kiggans in “early February and $1,000 in March 2023,” then on “April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor,’” and “less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA
--	--	--

		Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab. — Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’ — The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24)
We transition to see an image of Earmark Request on Kiggans Letterhead https://d12t4t5x3vyjzu.cloudfront.net/kiggans.house.gov/uploads/2024/05/FY25-C-PF-Financial-Disclosures.pdf GFX: Jen Kiggans “Requested Millions Of Taxpayer Dollars” Politico, 7.11.24	Then, she “requested millions of taxpayer dollars” for a project that would help those donors profit.	In her first term, Jen Kiggans “requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the

		first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab. — Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’ — The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24) “The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500” to Jen Kiggans in “early February and $1,000 in March 2023,” then on “April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor,’” and “less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both
--	--	---

		the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab. — Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’ — The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24)
We transition to see more footage/images of Kiggans smiling. GFX: Jen Kiggans Serving Her Donors At Our Expense	Narrator: Jen Kiggans. Serving her corporate donors at our expense.	In her first term, Jen Kiggans “requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab. — Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in

		appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’ — The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24) “The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500” to Jen Kiggans in “early February and $1,000 in March 2023,” then on “April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor,’” and “less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches.” “FIRST IN PI — THE DONOR-EARMARK BENEFICIARY NEXUS: Rep. Jen Kiggans (R-Va.) recently requested millions of taxpayer dollars in an earmark for a natural gas pipeline that could specifically benefit two companies whose corporate PACs had recently donated thousands of dollars to her campaign, Daniel reports. — The corporate PAC for Rocket Lab, a satellite and space company, donated $2,500 to Kiggans in early February and $1,000 in March 2023. On April 22 she met with the CEO of the company, Peter Beck, calling it an ‘honor.’ The same day, DLA Piper disclosed in its quarterly report that Tony Samp and Nathaniel Bell had lobbied both the House and the Senate on appropriations funding bills in the first quarter on behalf of Rocket Lab.
--	--	--

		— Less than two weeks later, Kiggans requested $7.4 million in appropriations to expand a Maryland natural gas pipeline into Eastern Virginia that Rocket Lab last year was reportedly eyeing to use for fuel in some of its spacecraft launches. She said in the funding request that the project would ‘create 143 jobs, generate $7M in labor income and sustain $6.9M savings in fuel cost for existing businesses.’ — The corporate PAC for Tyson Foods also gave $1,000 to her campaign last November; Kiggans said in her request for the pipeline expansion that Tyson was among the ‘potential anchor customers’ for the gas line.” (Politico, 07/11/24)
LCV Victory Fund is responsible for the content of this advertising. Paid for by LCV Victory Fund, www.lcvvictoryfund.org, and not authorized by any candidate or candidate’s committee.	Narrator: LCV Victory Fund is responsible for the content of this advertising.	